

Midwest Surveys Inc. (Midwest) and Boundary Technical Group Inc. (Boundary) set to merge operations to provide wide-ranging, customer-oriented survey solutions in Western Canada.

Midwest and Boundary are today announcing a merger of their companies to create a combined entity with diverse surveying expertise. For nearly seven decades, Midwest has provided oil and gas surveying in Western Canada, with the addition of pipeline construction and integrity services in the last decade or so. In its 36 year history, Boundary has concentrated upon utility surveying and related services and positioned itself as a leader in that field.

"We're excited about the opportunity to bring our companies together. Boundary possesses a specific skill in utility surveying and we're looking forward to utilizing Midwest's geographical diversity to capitalize upon expansion opportunities" said Kevin Swabey, Midwest's President. Craig White, Boundary's President, echoed this excitement about the future. "Midwest is one firm that we felt would be a good fit with our business, both in terms of how employees are treated and clients are handled. We see great things for our combined operation moving forward."

The united entity has opted to continue operations under the Midwest name. The offices of Boundary, which will carry on as the Utility Services Group, will relocate to Midwest's Calgary building on Sunridge Boulevard in the coming weeks. "We're looking forward to welcoming 25 new employees into our operation," said Scott Boulanger, Midwest's COO. He adds, "I'm also excited to work with Craig, as the manager of the department, to grow this segment of our business."

Questions regarding the merger of Midwest and Boundary can be directed to:

Kevin Swabey, President, Midwest Surveys Inc., 403-244-7471

Craig White, President, Boundary Technical Group Inc., 403-477-0030